US National Grid Trail Markers

Markers like this along snowmobile and ski trails allow you to provide precise location information to emergency responders. Simply read the two large four digit numbers to the 911 operator, and they will have your location. In some cases, they may ask for the smaller white numbers and letters. Reference lines on map are the first two digits of these numbers.

Since you may need to move to find a marker or get cell service, be prepared to give directions to the site of the emergency using the marker as a reference.
